Notable Trade Books

Judy D. Butler
Contributing Editor

This issue contains three delightfully different children’s books with unique strategies to use to teach these to your class. My Roles and Tiles of Coins takes us to Africa to learn an economic lesson appropriate for children in any country. Let It Begin Here! Lexington and Concord: First Battles of the American Revolution is primarily for young people in middle and high school, but could be adapted for use with any class learning about the American Revolution. The activities are adaptable to many ages. A Little Peace is a thematic book structured around the concept of peace. Readers, especially the young children for whom this book is designed, are encouraged to consider how peace looks and feels. I hope you enjoy these three very different books.

The Notable Trade Books Feature of Social Studies Research and Practice is seeking reviewers for future issues. If you have an interest in previewing submissions to this portion of the journal, please send a statement of interest and a copy of your vita to jbutler@westga.edu.

We have also created a guide for those who would like to publish in Social Studies Research and Practice Notable Books. Please review the guidelines for publication in this issue. We feel that developing lesson plans will be easier and reviews of manuscripts will go smoother if these guidelines are followed.

Hope you find them helpful.
