This issue’s offerings in the Notable Trade Book Section are all for upper elementary, lower middle school, aged children. They should provide wonderful additions to your selections of books for the young adolescent. They are all American stories.

Lawn Boy is about a young boy who tackles his first lawn mowing business. In the process, he learns some great lessons about a multitude of economic concepts as his business quickly outgrows its capacity. It is recommended for grades 4-6.

Jane Addams: Champion of Democracy is a biography of a famous American women. It tells her compassionate story in a way that will interest young people in grades 5-7.

Remember: The Journey to School Integration is a non-fiction, predominantly picture book of the story of school integration through the eyes of the children who lived it. While a treasure for any age, it is recommended for use with children in grades 4-6.
